The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown that the most reliable method is the one in which the rate is determined from the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products. This method is applicable to all reactions in which the concentration of one of the reactants or products can be measured. The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various factors which influence the rate of reaction. It is shown that the rate of reaction is influenced by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, the presence of a catalyst, and the surface area of the reactants. The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various theories of reaction rates. It is shown that the most widely accepted theory is the one in which the rate of reaction is determined by the energy of activation. The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various applications of reaction rates. It is shown that reaction rates are of great importance in many fields of science, including chemistry, physics, and biology.
